Her Fan.
Here in the parlor, cool and sweet,
Scented with roses from the garden,
I wait the coming of her feet,
And vainly try my heart to harden.
For she is cold—ah, here's a fan
Lying outstretched upon the table,
A dainty toy from far Japan—
It must be yours, fair, blue-eyed Mabel.

Here, just beneath this purple cloud,
Is one blank space—and shall I fill it?
The thoughts I dare not speak aloud
My pen may tell her, if I will it.

It shall. Though never good at verse,
For four short lines I'm surely able—
There! Certainly I have seen worse,
That's a neat line, "O' charming Mabel!"

(I hear her step! And now the "wish"
O' silken skirts the staircase trailing,
When will she see it? Oh, I wish—
My courage all at once is failing.

I'll have it out! "Miss Clair, I found
This fan and wrote some nonsense on it
Perhaps you will read it. I'll be bound
You'll laugh at my poor awkward sonnet.
But if you knew—could I but show—"
(Can it be true that smile she smoothes?)
"Oh, thank you. She'll be pleased, I know;
For, Mr. Bond, that fan's my mother's."
—Home Weekly.

A Tough Goose.
Mr. N. Vickary, the well known taxidermist, of Lynn, tells a story of the old colored man John Johnson, a celebrated Lynn character. John happened into the shop one day just after Mr. Vickary had been skinning a large bald eagle. Thinking to have a little sport, Mr. V. asked John if he would like a nice goose for his dinner the next day.

"I thank you a hundred million times of you gib me de goose," dead I will," John exclaimed; and in due time the skinned body of the eagle was wrapped in a newspaper, and Johnson started off with it under his arm, still volubly expressing his gratitude. About a week after Mr. V. met John on Union street, and asked him how he liked the goose he had given him.

"Dat goose," said Johnson, showing his ivory, "dat war de toughest goose. Its declar dat mus' have been fader to all de ganders. I biled dat goose, an' I parried him, den I biled him again, but I declar dat ar wuz de chawinest bird me an' de ole woman ever seed."

After telling him that there must have been some mistake in his method of cooking, they parted, till one day, as a large sawy owl was in preparation for stuffing, and Johnson happened to be going by, Mr. V. called to him to come to his shop, came hobbling in, when Mr. V. asked him if he did not want another goose, pointing to the owl lying on the bench with its skin drawn over its head.

Johnson looked suspiciously from Mr. V. to the bird, and scratching his woolly pate, remarked: "Se here, boss, ef 'tain't no trouble, I'd like to see de feet on dat goose afore I carries him to de ole woman."—Harper's Monthly.

Under Summer Skies.
It is pleasant lounging the summer away in idle, thoughtless solitude. There are no door bells on tents. No red light lures the busy world. No untimely caller distracts your mind from the dazed contemplation of the eternal, illimitable, restless, unnumberable, exhaustless, sunless, unbounded, countless, immeasurable and insupportable swarms of outnumbering midges that in multitudinous legions team in the air of June, ever fresh, empty and hungry. When you go into the wilderness to dwell in tents, as is not bring a gun. You don't need it. The guides will do all your shooting for you. You don't mind, because they disappear about the first of July. Mosquitoes of the Adirondack tribes you can kill with a club. But the midges. I'm sure I don't know what to tell you to bring. Camphor they like, although they prefer pennyroyal. When they can't get that they gladly season their victims with Pond's extract. Ammonia they detest. There is a mixture of sweet oil and tar that is infallible. It keeps the midges ten feet away from you. It also keeps everybody else in camp still further away. For yourself, while wearing this ointment you long to die, so that you may be buried on one side of the mountain and have your nose cut off and buried on the other, with a clothes pin on it, far, far away from yourself.—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

A Connecticut Paper's Little Fish Story.
There is an old picker in the Plainville pond—so old that he cannot make a living in the pickery way of catching sunnier fish, and after several hours of vain pursuit one day last week he saw an "devil" fish, so he glided up and bit the line off close to the pole and pulled it around until he caught a little fish, which he ate, and baited the hook again with part of it proceeded to fish or another. Our apprentice L. S. this story, and we have decided to make a lawyer of him.—Plainville Journal.

A Very Liberal Time Table.
Traveler—Mister, what time does the accommodation get in that's going down to Smith's Clearing?
Ticket Agent (within)—From 1:30 to 1:45 in the afternoon.
Traveler—Is she generally on time?
Ticket Agent—Generally.—Harper's.
